May We Recommend...

The Reformed Expository Commentary edited by Sinclair Ferguson is a fantastic resource for personal or group Bible study. Rather than being a traditional commentary, it reads more like a series of sermons on a Bible book. Easy enough to read along with daily personal devotions, and yet deep enough to add a lot to group studies, these are a wonderful read for anyone who wants to dive into a deeper study of the Word. Highly recommended!

It's easy to recognize the big sins in other people, but what about those insidious sins we hide or even defend as our personality? Respectable Sins by Jerry Bridges addresses the most common sins in every person's life. Highly Recommended for everyone.

Thinking about having "the Talk" is enough to make every parent queasy, but what if there were books to read to our children to start the conversation young?

How God Makes Babies by Jim Burns is one in a series of books that can assist parents in introducing sexuality to children ages 6-9. Parents, please read it first without your children listening to be sure your kids are ready for this conversation.

Eric Says Sorry, Eric Says Please, and Eric Says Thanks, by Dai Hankey are three delightful children's books that introduce the concepts of guilt, grace, and gratitude at a level that children can understand and resonate with. Highly recommended as a bedtime story for anyone.

A Promise Kept by Robertson McQuilkin is a lovely biographical story about a man caring for his wife as she is gripped more and more by Alzheimer's. A story of undying devotion and endless love, this book is a great lighter read for anyone.

All the books in this issue were donations to our library! Thank you to everyone who donated books! The wishlist has been updated, in case you would like to add to our book collection. Please take a look at the shelves and take a book out to read. If you would like help picking out a book, feel free to chat with Cecilia (She can talk about books for a looooong time...)
